We have received large Memorial Donations from families who have designated Child Haven as the charity to receive donations in honour of a loved one who has died. Many thanks to the families!

We wish to again thank Naseem Vellani and her friends for the donation of hundreds of new and used saris. These women are followers of His Holiness, the Aga Khan.

Patricia's Paul-Carson's book, Into the Heart of India, is now on our web site. It's the story of Trisha's experience as a volunteer Intern at a Child Haven Home in Gujarat some years ago.

*Dear Child Haven,
After reading your November newsletter, I must admit that I am one of those 73.32% of drivers who habitually start the car before buckling the seatbelt. Having resolved to mend my ways and confirmed a saving of .000137 liters of gas each time, I enclose $84.50 in advance on the savings I expect to accrue over the next fifty years.
Sincerely, Susan Bowers, 14 Dec 2009*

ORPHANAGES - GOOD OR BAD?

Recent research indicates that outcomes for orphaned and abandoned children aged 6 to 12 living in institutions (orphanages) are as good as outcomes for orphaned and abandoned children living in family situations. In fact, when differences were significant they were in the direction of better outcomes for the children in institutions.

Dr. Kathryn Whetten and the Positive Outcomes for Orphans (POFO) Research Team, of Duke University, released results of her research “A Comparison of the Wellbeing of Orphans and Abandoned Children, Ages 6-12, in Institutional and Community-based Care Settings in 5 Less Wealthy Nations.” Almost 3,000 children from India, Tanzania, Kenya, Ethiopia and Cambodia were studied.

Dr. Whetten examined emotional development, cognitive functioning, behaviour, physical growth and health. The study included single orphans (children with one parent living) and they were the only group of children whose outcomes were slightly better than other children in the study. The study demonstrated that much greater variability among children exists within care settings than between care settings.

The study is significant, as leaders are struggling to care for the increasingly serious epidemic of 143,000,000 orphans and millions more abandoned children worldwide. Although many global policy makers are advocating that institution-living orphaned and abandoned children be moved as quickly as possible to a family setting and that institutional care be used only as a last resort, this study suggests that such a policy could result in moving children from a care setting in which they are doing well to one where they might not do well.

For a copy of the complete study you can go to the web site: <http://www.plosone.org> and search Dr. Kathryn Whetten. Information submitted by Trisha Paul-Carson

BONNIE LORE - an occasional column by her long-suffering husband. (earlier chapters are on our web site)

Chapter 13 CHILD FROM THE NORTH

TIBIKI

On April 7th 1974 the minister's column in the Unitarian Church newsletter (Pointe Claire, Quebec) had the following:

"For Unto Us Another Child Is Adopted. Our twelfth child is six years old. She comes from Canada's Northwest Territories, of Cree and Ojibway Aboriginal background... Tibiki has brought great joy to our home, and will surely be our final child."

Bonnie gave her a name that was somewhat the opposite of her apparent diminutive nature: TIBIKI NIMKI JANE EYRE CAPPUCCINO. The aboriginal words, loosely translated mean, "Great thunderbird woman of the night". Jane Eyre, one of our favourite heroines in English literature, was reared in an institution, and overcame terrific odds to become a truly liberated person.

Tibiki had been placed with a family as a foster child, and then placed with an institution for adoption. She was then adopted by a family in Montreal who had four boys born to them. They wanted a girl. Later, when the mother gave birth to a daughter, the father felt the adopted girl was no longer needed! - and insisted that she leave.

The mother tearfully asked Bonnie if we would take the child. Bonnie brought her home. We worked it out with the agency later. Tibiki was a quiet, resourceful child. She was good at finding things, like lost rabbits or lost keys.

We had Tibiki only a month before we moved permanently from Pointe Claire to our Maxville farm. She said hardly a word. She seldom opened her mouth - just gazed intently with her big brown eyes. Unlike some of our other kids, she immediately did what she was told to do. A mysterious child, she seemed to look at things with a different perspective from other people.

Soon after we moved to the farm I was talking with her as she stood on the hay wagon, her arm on my shoulder. She said, "Daddy, I'm going to work hard so maybe I can stay here."

I was totally melted. A ball came up into my throat. It just broke my heart to think that a (previous) father could ever, ever, cast out such an absolutely innocent and infinitely lovely child. I gathered her little frame into my arms and gave her a long hug.

Slowly recovering from the immense tidal wave of this moment, I quietly explained to her: "Mommy and I love you, and we want you to stay with us - no matter if you work hard or not - no matter if you are good or not. It doesn't matter. We love you just the way you are, and I guess you're stuck with this new Mommy and Daddy until you're grown up. Then you can decide what you want to do."

But she was good, and she did work hard.

Louise MacDiarmid, our “go-between” reports that girls sometimes cut off their hair because they can’t keep it clean, and there are lice. It is hard to keep clean in the village because there is no warm water and often no shampoo. In winter because houses are not heated, children are not bathed as they are in Canada. However, they are getting enough to eat.
